

Is It Safe For My Baby To Use A Baby Pillow?

If you are pregnant and anxiously awaiting the birth of your new baby, you more than likely have also been waiting for months and months to lavish your precious infant with all kinds of cute and cuddly welcome home gifts. A wide variety of discount and department stores carry a huge selection of baby items. You have so much to choose from in adorable looking stuffed animals, and of course the perfect baby pillow you would like to purchase for their bed. It must be ok to buy pillows for babies, since so many of your favorite stores carry them, right? This is most definitely NOT the case. Not only is doing such a thing not ok, it can be very dangerous, and can even be fatal to put a stuffed animal or baby pillow in the same bed with your newborn or infant baby. The use of baby pillows or stuffed animals can end up being deadly, even if your adorable baby sleeps in a bassinet or baby bed or his own.

Each of the cute little pillows that are covered with an endless amount of designs, are made with many different items, and some of which can be harmful to your baby. Every newborn baby has skin that is extremely sensitive. Your newborns skin could become irritated very easily from the various dyes and fabrics that are used to make a baby pillow.

Many parents who buy a baby pillow for their little bundle of joy, are only trying to be helpful, and think of the comfort of their baby. The best thing that you can do to be helpful to your new baby, is to educate yourself on the variety of safety issues that can mean the difference of life and death when it comes to the well being of your baby. To put it simply, there are far too many risks that outweigh any good that can come from putting a pillow close to your baby until they have reached two years old. Even at two years of age, some toddlers are not ready for a baby pillow. It is advised by many researchers, that until a child reaches the age of two years old, and they have outgrown the need for a baby bed, you should not use pillows.
