

All About Baby Announcements

Nothing in the world compares to the day baby comes home. Everyone in the family is excited. Many changes come with the new addition, though the mother and father have been getting ready for months already. So much planning and buying is done, from getting the room ready to holding the baby shower. The family has been busy as bees for awhile, and now it is time to let the world know about the new addition. Using baby announcements is one way to do this.

Baby announcements are cards sent out to relatives, friends, and coworkers, which let everyone know that the new baby is here. Baby announcements come in a great many styles and colors. Some will feature a picture of the new baby, making them a keepsake all will love.

When sending out baby announcements, there are no hard and fast rules of etiquette. The only rule of thumb is to remember that baby announcements should go out within the first two weeks after the baby is born. Because of this limited time frame, consider buying the cards online, which will make purchasing them easier. After all, with the new baby around, there are plenty more things to keep busy with than sending out announcements! The cards, after they have been bought, can be mailed to any sort of person the parents want to know about the baby. Sending baby announcements to coworkers, for example, is a good thing to do after having been a maternity leave for some time. Another potential recipient of baby announcements are the next door neighbors. The more cards sent out, the larger the chances are of receiving gifts as well.

Any text can go on the baby announcement. It makes sense, of course, to have the baby's name and birth details. Be sure to include information such as weight and the hospital name. Personal messages can also go on the announcement cards, but remember that these cards are going out to many different people. Still, it is nice to add a personal touch. One thing to consider adding is when the mother plans to be back from her leave.

Baby announcements come in many styles. As is the case with other kinds of cards, they can range from sentimental to cute and funny. Consider the announcements audience before going with one or the other. As there are many with pictures, choose those that will fit the baby's gender.

Announcements can come with pink or blue on them, but there are also many other choices. No matter what, be sure to pick a card that you will want to keep as a memento.
